THE contradiction and malignity of political debate have long since ceased to mar the tranquillity of my spirit. I will do what I can do to mitigate the asperities of politics, believing them to be altogether needless and unnatural, but for myself I have entered the region of calms, and none of these things move me. If this work be of God, it cannot be overthrown; if it be not, then the sooner it comes to naught the better for humanity. The year 1888 will always rank as having been, up to its date, the most remarkable in the history of the Temperance Reform. As it was the year of a presidential campaign, it was, for sufficiently apparent reasons, the one in which politicians of the old school would do least for prohibition; but the presence of the new school in politics and of women as an active power in public affairs to a degree before undreamed of mark it as a sort of moral watershed. In England the Primrose League of women antagonising Gladstones policy, and the Womens Liberal League presided over by that great statesmans wife, counting among its officers Jane Cobden (Richards daughter), and devoted to Home Rule, had already demonstrated the power of women in politics. Meanwhile the Prohibition party had enjoyed since 1881 the active co-operation of the White Ribbon women, and its vote had risen from ten thousand for General Neal Dow, of Maine,...
